EEOC	NOTICE	5/16/88

1. SUBJECT: Policy Statement on Indian Preference Under Title VII.
2. PURPOSE: This policy statement sets forth the Commission's interpretation of the meaning and scope of the Indian preference provision contained in Section 703(i) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended.
3. EFFECTIVE DATE: May 16, 1988
4. EXPIRATION DATE: As an exception to EEOC Order 205.001, Appendix V, Attachment 4, § a(5), this Notice will remain in effect until rescinded or superseded.
5. ORIGINATOR: Title VII/EPA Division, Office of Legal Counsel.
6. INSTRUCTIONS: This notice supplements the discussion at Section 604.10(d) of EEOC Compliance Manual, Volume II, Section 604, Theories of Discrimination. The notice should be filed behind the appendices to that section.
7. SUBJECT MATTER:

Section 703(i) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(i)(1982), provides an exception to Title VII's general nondiscrimination principles allowing certain employers under certain circumstances to exercise an employment preference in favor of American Indians.⁽¹⁾ That section provides as follows:

Nothing contained in this title shall apply to any business or enterprise on or near an Indian reservation with respect to any publicly announced employment practice of such business or enterprise under which a preferential treatment is given to any individual because he is an Indian living on or near a reservation.

The statutory language makes it clear that an employer seeking to avail itself of the Indian preference exception must meet three conditions: (1) the employer must be located on or near an Indian reservation, (2) the employer's preference for Indians must be publicly announced, and (3) the individual to whom preferential treatment is accorded must be an Indian living on or near a reservation. Neither Section 703(i) nor any other section of the Act, however, defines the terms "Indian reservation" or "near."

Although the Commission has issued several decisions involving the jurisdictional exemption of Indian tribes under Section 701(b)(1) of Title VII,⁽²⁾ its one published decision involving the Indian preference exception under Section 703(i) of the Act turned solely on the question of whether the employer had satisfied the public announcement requirement of that section. See Commission Decision No. 74-26, CCH EEOC Decisions (1983) ¶ 6398. Thus, the Commission did not have occasion in that case to address the statutory requirement of being "on or near an Indian reservation."

Because the Commission has received various requests from employers, Indian tribes, and state fair employment practices agencies for its interpretation of the "on or near" phrase and the applicability of the Indian preference exception and because the issue is an increasingly important one on which the Commission has not previously issued guidance, the Commission now delineates its position with respect to the exception provided in Section 703(i) of the Act. Specifically, the Commission addresses: (1) the definition of "Indian reservation" for Title VII purposes, (2) the meaning of the term "near," (3) the scope of the term "employment practice," and (4) the issue of whether a preference based on tribal affiliation conflicts with the provisions of Title VII.

Indian Reservation

The need to define the term "Indian reservation" within the meaning of Section 703(i) of Title VII arises in connection with the circumstances that exist in the state of Oklahoma. As has been brought to the Commission's attention, Oklahoma is the home of a large number of Indian tribes and many areas of the state contain high Native American populations, yet there are no longer any Indian reservations as such in Oklahoma. (3) Many employers in the state, however, are located in and around the sites of former reservations. Thus, the question presented is whether the Indian preference exception provided in Section 703(i) is available to such employers or whether applicability of that provision is dependent upon the present existence of an Indian reservation as the necessary base from which to measure whether the "on or near" requirement is met.

The issue is one of first impression. As noted above, Title VII does not define the term "Indian reservation." Nor is there any indication in the legislative history of the Act of the meaning intended by Congress in its use of that term in Section 703(i). Further, research has disclosed no court decision defining the term for Title VII purposes.

Before examining statutory use of the term outside the context of Title VII, we consider its ordinary meaning:

The term "Indian reservation" originally had meant any land reserved from an Indian cession to the federal government regardless of the form of tenure. During the 1850's, the modern meaning of Indian reservation emerged, referring to land set aside under federal protection for the residence of Tribal Indians, regardless of origin. (4)

Although "Indian reservation" is the more commonly familiar term, the governing legal term for most jurisdictional purposes is "Indian country." (5) The latter is defined at 18 U.S.C. § 1151 as follows:

Except as otherwise provided in sections 1154 and 1156 of this title, the term "Indian country," as used in this chapter, means (a) all land within the limits of any Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States government, notwithstanding the issuance of any patent, and, including rights-of-way running through the reservation, (b) all dependent Indian communities within the borders of the United States whether within the original or subsequently acquired territory thereof, and whether within or without the limits of a state, and (c) all Indian allotments, the Indian titles to which have not been extinguished, including rights-of-way running through the same.

The definition in Section 1151 is controlling with respect to the applicability of federal criminal law in Indian country. While this definition relates specifically to determinations of federal criminal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has noted that it is also applicable to questions of federal civil jurisdiction. (6) However, although Indian reservations are included in the statutory definition of Indian country, the term "Indian reservation" is not separately defined. (7)

Similarly, the terms "Indian reservation" or "reservation" appear but are undefined in numerous other federal statutes. (8) A review of Title 25 of the U.S. Code, which pertains specifically to Indians, has disclosed only three instances in which "reservation" is defined, although the term is used repeatedly throughout that title. (9) Of these three definitions, one relates specifically to an Indian tribe in Connecticut. (10) A second definition, which is of general application, is found in the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978, 25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq. Incorporating and expanding upon the definition of Indian country, that Act provides as follows:

"[R]eservation" means Indian country as defined in section 1151 of title 18 and any lands, not covered under such section, title to which is either held by the United States in trust for the benefit of any Indian tribe or individual or held by any Indian tribe or individual subject to a restriction by the United States against alienation.

25 U.S.C. § 1903(10).

The third definition appears in the Indian Financing Act of 1974, 25 U.S.C. § 1451 et seq., which provides Indian tribes and individuals capital in the form of loans and grants to promote economic development. That definition specifically includes former Indian reservations in Oklahoma. As defined therein:

"Reservation" includes Indian reservations, public domain Indian allotments, former Indian reservations in Oklahoma, and land held by incorporated Native groups, regional corporations, and village corporations under the provisions of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.].

25 U.S.C. § 1452(d).

While no statutory definition discovered other than that in the Indian Financing Act explicitly recognizes former Indian reservations in Oklahoma, they are included in the definition of "reservation" contained in various regulations promulgated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) of the Department of the Interior. For example, in the regulations governing BIA's financial assistance and social services program, 25 C.F.R. § 20.1 et seq. (1987), the following definition is provided:

"Reservation" means any federally recognized Indian tribe's reservation, Pueblo, or Colony, including former reservations in Oklahoma, Alaska Native regions established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688), and Indian allotments.

25 C.F.R. § 20.1(v) (1987). \(11\)

Against this background, the Commission must determine the meaning of the term "Indian reservation" under Section 703(i) of Title VII. In so doing, the Commission is mindful that Title VII is remedial social legislation and is, therefore, entitled to liberal construction in order to effectuate the purpose of the Act. \(12\) The purpose for the inclusion of Section 703(i) is explained in the legislative history:

A new subsection 703(i) has been added permitting enterprises on or near Indian reservations to follow preferential hiring practices toward Indians. This exemption is consistent with the Federal government's policy of encouraging Indian employment and with the special legal position of Indians. \(13\)

In the Commission's view, the Congressional purpose of encouraging the voluntary extension of employment opportunities to Indians would be unduly hampered by narrowly defining the term "Indian reservation" within the meaning of Section 703(i) to exclude former Indian reservations in Oklahoma. Such a definition would effectively preclude the applicability of Title VII's Indian preference provision to employers in a state which was originally Indian Territory and whose present population includes a high percentage of Native Americans, a result which appears contrary to the intent of Section 703(i). Additionally, the Commission takes note that a narrow definition of that term would similarly render the preference inapplicable in the state of Alaska. \(14\)

In light of these considerations, the Commission believes that the purpose of Section 703(i) would be furthered by defining "Indian reservation" in a manner that accords special recognition to the circumstances that exist in both Oklahoma and Alaska. Therefore, guided by the definitions of "reservation" provided in the Indian Financing Act of 1974 and in regulations issued by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, \(15\) it is the Commission's position that the terms "Indian reservation" and "reservation" in Section 703(i) of Title VII include former Indian reservations in Oklahoma and land held by incorporated Native groups, regional corporations, and village corporations in Alaska under the provisions of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

Should a dispute arise regarding whether a particular tract of land falls within this definition, the Commission will present the question to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and will make its determination after consideration of the conclusion reached by that agency.

On or Near an Indian Reservation

Section 703(i) of Title VII uses the phrase "on or near an Indian reservation" in identifying the businesses or enterprises that may lawfully exercise the Indian preference exception provided in that section. The individual Indians to whom preferential treatment may be extended are similarly identified as those living "on or near a reservation." With respect to this phrase, the issue presented in determining whether the statutory criterion is met regards the meaning of the word "near," which is undefined in the Act.

The sole Title VII case deciding the applicability of the Indian preference contained in Section 703(i) is Livingston v. Ewing, 601 F.2d 1110, 20 EPD ¶ 30,002 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 870, 20 EPD ¶ 30,266 (1979). In that case, the non-Indian plaintiffs challenged the policy of the Museum of New Mexico in Santa Fe of permitting only Indians to sell their handmade jewelry and crafts on the grounds of the Museum. Holding that the Museum's policy came within the Section 703(i) exception, even though the Museum was not the direct employer of the Indians, the court found that the "on or near" requirement was satisfied by facts showing that the Museum was located eight miles from an Indian reservation and within a "short distance" of other reservations, including the ones from which the Indians came. 601 F.2d at 1115.

However, because the court's holding in Livingston v. Ewing is fact-specific, the decision in that case does not provide a definition of the word "near" for Title VII purposes. Nor is general guidance on the meaning of that term found outside of Title VII in the Supreme Court's decision in Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199 (1974). Although the Court there held that, in appropriating funds for the Bureau of Indian Affairs' general assistance program, Congress did not intend to limit eligibility for benefits under the program to Indians living "on" a reservation, to the exclusion of those living "near" one, the Court did not decide the breadth of the term "near." Rather, the Court held that it covered the Indian plaintiffs, who lived in an Indian community fifteen miles from their reservation.

Although applicable judicial precedent defining "near" is lacking, a definition of that term is found in regulations issued by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP) of the Department of Labor. 41 C.F.R. § 60-1.1 et seq. (1987). The regulations, which apply to federal contractors, define "near" with reference to an Indian preference provision similar to that contained in Section 703(i) of Title VII. The regulations provide in pertinent part:

Work on or near Indian reservations. It shall not be a violation of the equal opportunity clause for a construction or nonconstruction contractor to extend a publicly announced preference in employment to Indians living on or near an Indian reservation in connection with employment opportunities on or near an Indian reservation. The use of the word "near" would include all that area where a person seeking employment could reasonably be expected to commute to and from in the course of a work day.

41 C.F.R. § 60-1.5(a)(6) (1987) (emphasis added). \(16\)

Upon considering the intent of Section 703(i), the Commission is persuaded that the definition of "near" in the OFCCP regulations cited above is consistent with and furthers the purpose of the Title VII provision. As noted, this definition appears in the specific context of an Indian preference provision that parallels that in Title VII. Unlike a definition that establishes the outer reach of that term by specifying a fixed distance applicable in all cases, a definition based on what may be considered reasonable commuting distance provides the flexibility necessary to take differing geographic and economic circumstances into account. Thus, since proximity to employment sources varies from one reservation to another and one part of the country to another, such a definition avoids potential inequities and promotes a fair application of the statutory exception.

For these reasons, the Commission adopts the definition of "near" provided in the OFCCP regulations set forth above as the definition of that term under Section 703(i) of Title VII. Applying this definition, determinations of whether the "on or near" criterion is met shall be made on a case-by-case basis.

Employment Practice

To what extent may preferential treatment be accorded Indians under Section 703(i)? That section provides an Indian preference exception with respect to "any publicly announced employment practice." The legislative history, discussed above, indicates that this exception permits covered employers to follow preferential hiring practices toward Indians. \(17\) The question before the Commission is whether the term "employment practice" in Section 703(i) thus refers solely to initial hiring decisions.

In Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 7 EPD ¶ 9431 (1974), the Supreme Court upheld an employment preference for Indians in the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) under Section 12 of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 472. The Court held that the preference provided in the 1934 Act was not repealed by implication by the 1972 amendments to Title VII, which extended Title VII's discrimination prohibitions to federal sector employment. The Court further held that the preference did not constitute invidious racial discrimination in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The statute at issue in Mancari provides a preference with respect to "appointment to vacancies." Although the preference previously had been accorded only at the initial hiring stage, under BIA policy as revised in 1972 it was extended to filling vacancies by original appointment, reinstatement, and promotions. 417 U.S. at 538 n.3. Because the question of whether the 1934 Act authorized a preference in other than initial hiring was not before the Court in Mancari, the Court noted that it expressed no opinion on that issue. Id. at 539 n.5. However, the Court cited two lower court decisions in which the phrase "appointment to vacancies" in Section 12 of the 1934 Act was specifically construed, Freeman v. Morton and Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Hickel.

In Freeman v. Morton, 499 F.2d 494 (D.C. Cir. 1974), the court held that the BIA preference applies to filling vacancies through initial hiring, promotion, lateral transfer, and reassignment. In Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Hickel, 432 F.2d 956 (10th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 981 (1971), the court concluded that the preference was not applicable to reductions in force since such circumstances do not involve the filling of vacancies. Based on the statutory language and the legislative history, the court in Mescalero found that Congress did not intend the preference to be applied in a manner that would result in the displacement of existing non-Indian employees of BIA. Following the Tenth Circuit's decision in Mescalero, however, Congress enacted legislation making the preference applicable to reductions in force at BIA and the Indian Health Service. See 25 U.S.C. § 472a(a) (1982). "The purpose of this provision is to overcome the adverse effects of the Mescalero decision...." H.R. Rep. No. 370, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 12, reprinted in 1979 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2068, 2077. See Preston v. Heckler, 734 F.2d 1359, 1371 n.15 (1984) (commenting on the Congressional response to Mescalero in a case involving application of the preference in the Indian Health Service).

In the Commission's view, Congress's use of the general term "employment practice" in Section 703(i) of Title VII suggests an intent to permit preferential treatment of Indians more broadly than in the context of hiring alone. Although the court cases discussed above analyze the scope of an Indian preference authorized under a statute other than Title VII, the Commission believes that these decisions and the subsequent Congressional enactment in response to Mescalero provide useful guidance in determining the breadth of the term "employment practice" in Section 703(i).

Drawing upon this guidance, it is the Commission's position that, for Title VII purposes, employment practices under which preferential treatment may be accorded to Indians are those requiring the selection of individuals to fill positions, however created, or to retain positions when jobs are eliminated. Accordingly, the preference is applicable to employment decisions involving, for example, hiring, promotion, transfer, and reinstatement as well as to layoffs and reductions in force.

The Commission does not reach a determination of whether the term "employment practice" in Section 703(i) covers other terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, such as compensation, benefits, work assignments, or training. The issue of whether the Indian preference in Title VII extends to employment decisions involving such terms and conditions is non-CDP. Charges raising this issue should be processed according to the instructions provided in EEOC Compliance Manual § 603 for processing priority-issue charges.

Tribal Affiliation

The final issue to be addressed is whether the extension of an employment preference based on tribal affiliation--that is, a preference limited to Indians who belong to a particular tribe, to the exclusion of members of any other tribe--is permissible under Section 703(i) of Title VII. The issue arises, for example, where an employer located on or near a specific Indian tribe's reservation wishes to accord a preference restricted to members of that tribe either on its own initiative or in compliance with a tribal ordinance requiring that a preference be given to members of the tribe.

The Indian preference exception provided in Section 703(i) is stated in general terms. That section neither expressly authorizes nor prohibits a distinction among Indians based on tribal membership. By contrast to Title VII, which is silent on the issue of tribal affiliation, regulations promulgated by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP) of the Department of Labor and by the Department of the Interior specifically prohibit consideration of tribal affiliation in according the preferences permitted.

The relevant provision of the OFCCP regulations, which are applicable to federal contractors, is found at 41 C.F.R. § 60-1.5(a)(6) (1987). The first two sentences of that section are set out in the foregoing discussion of the definition of the phrase "on or near an Indian reservation." The final sentence of the section provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

Contractors or subcontractors extending such a preference shall not, however, discriminate among Indians on the basis of religion, sex, or tribal affiliation

41 C.F.R. § 60-1.5(a)(6) (1987) (emphasis added).

Section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975, 25 U.S.C. § 450e(b), requires the inclusion of Indian preference provisions in certain federal contracts and grants. Regulations issued by the Department of the Interior, governing the implementation of Section 7(b) of that Act, appear at 48 C.F.R. § 1404.7000 et seq. and §§ 1452.204-71 and 72 (1987). These regulations require the insertion of the following clause in specified contracts:

The Contractor agrees to give preference to Indians who can perform the work required regardless of age (subject to existing laws and regulations), sex, religion, or tribal affiliation for training and employment opportunities under this contract and, to the extent feasible consistent with the efficient performance of this contract, training and employment preferences and opportunities shall be provided to Indians regardless of age (subject to existing laws and regulations), sex, religion, or tribal affiliation who are not fully qualified to perform under this contract.

48 C.F.R. § 1452.204-71 (1987) (emphasis added).

Thus, under the cited regulations of both OFCCP and the Department of the Interior, covered federal contractors may not discriminate among Indians on the basis of tribal affiliation in extending an employment preference. Although Title VII is silent in this regard, the Commission considers the prohibition expressed in those regulations to best serve the purpose intended by Section 703(i).

On this point, the Commission believes that, in enacting Section 703(i), Congress intended to encourage the extension of employment opportunities to Indians generally, without allowing discrimination among Indians of different tribes. Under Section 703(i), the exception applies to employment practices under which preferential treatment is given to "any individual because he is an Indian living on or near a reservation" (emphasis added). The statutory language supports the conclusion that Congress did not intend to permit tribal distinctions among Indians otherwise qualifying for such preferential treatment.

Further, as a practical matter, the Commission notes that in some instances employers may be located on or near the reservation of only one tribe and that the Indians living on or near that reservation may be members of that tribe. Under such circumstances, the preference may operate, in effect, to favor only members of that specific tribe without disadvantaging Indians of other tribes. However, in some parts of the country employers are situated near the reservations of more than one tribe or more than one tribe may share the same reservation. The potential inequities resulting from according a preference based on tribal affiliation are most clearly evident when these circumstances are contemplated.

In light of these considerations, it is the Commission's position that extension of an employment preference on the basis of tribal affiliation is in conflict with and violates Section 703(i) of Title VII. The Commission emphasizes, however, that its position with respect to Section 703(i) affects only employers covered by Title VII. Since Indian tribes are exempt from the provisions of the Act under Section 701(b)(1), preferences or requirements based on tribal membership or affiliation imposed by a tribe with respect to its own employment practices are not violative of Title VII. See Wardle v. Ute Indian Tribe, 623 F.2d 670, 23 EPD ¶ 31,035 (10th Cir. 1980).

1. This policy statement does not extend to charges/complaints brought under either the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, as amended (ADEA), 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq. (1982), or the Equal Pay Act of 1963 (EPA), 29 U.S.C. § 206(d) (1982), since, unlike Title VII, neither of those statutes contains an Indian preference exception. Additionally, neither the ADEA nor the EPA provides a jurisdictional exemption for Indian tribes as does Section 701(b)(1) of Title VII.
